

Production Displays

Why?

Your Production line's efficiency relies on everything working well, and all production staff being aware of what they must do and how they are doing NOW. It is too late if shortfalls are noticed at the end of the shift.

Plus, your customers will be impressed to note that you take production line monitoring seriously, as it shows that you have your finger on the pulse of your production facility.

The benefits?

With live production data, if the production team is behind target, they can see immediately that they need to increase output rate if they are to achieve target by the end of the shift.

In addition, the production manager can see at a glance how each of his lines is performing and can immediately investigate and correct backlogs and low output.

Overhead beacons showing workstation status can be integrated into a single display board so that maintenance staff can react fast to any stoppages.

And your customers will be reassured if they see you are using production monitoring displays in your factory, that you are more likely to be able to meet delivery schedules.

How?

Most of our displays are fully self-contained.

That means they only need mains power and a pulse per item produced, and they can compute and display total, rate, downtime, OEE, moving target, quality %, fault messages etc.

The displays are modular, made from standard functional models in our Fusion and EasyReader range, plus any communications interfaces, sensors, beacons or sounders needed to complete the package.

The enclosures are all made by us, so can be any size necessary to allow the display to be seen clearly in your plant environment. All round sealing to IP65 is standard on most of our displays.

Plus we often brand displays with customers' logos, colour schemes and graphics, to give a truly corporate feel to the production line. We can do the same for you.

The displays can also accept data from existing production control systems and can create data for you to use in reporting and diagnosis.

But I need a special display!

We specialise in specials! No two customers have identical requirements, so we are geared up to adapt to your exact needs, and will be pleased to quote for a solution which meets all your requirements.

You can download a Custom Special Wishlist from <http://www.london-electronics.com/wishlist.php>

